JOINT ANNUAL MEETING 2017

Future Trends in Teaching and Learning

Students are looking for something beyond a “one-size-fits-all” approach for their post-secondary journeys. Recent studies show that over 50,000 of BC post-secondary students move between institutions annually and these movers take a variety of different directions along the way. Post-secondary students in BC have diverse backgrounds and educational career goals.

In recent years post-secondary institutions have responded to significant transformations in the post-secondary education environment to facilitate access and success. In a world characterized by the availability of abundant information and rapid technological innovation, the capacity to convey complex knowledge and facilitate understanding with creativity and rigour are key features of post-secondary learning.

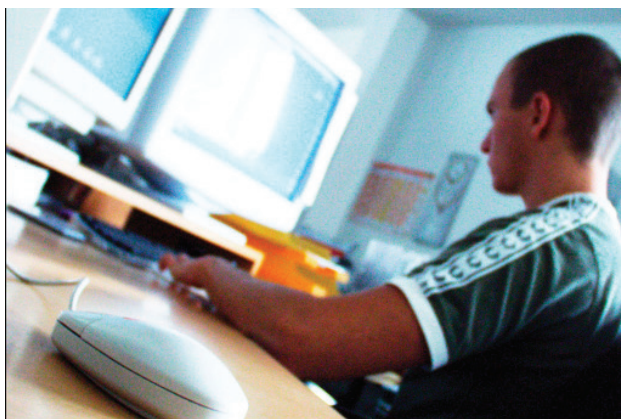

Contemporary students also benefit from a transfer system that offers an extensive range of opportunities to accommodate their diverse needs and circumstances and the ongoing efforts of institutional partners across the provincial post-secondary system.
